THE REPUBLICAN: LAWRENCE, KANSAS, JANUARY 31, 1861.

THE REPUBLICAN.

CITY OF LAWRENCE, THURSDAY, JANUARY 31, 1861.

JOHN SPER,
VERNON NICHOLAS, EDITORS.

KANSAS BILL SIGNED!

The following special dispatch was received by the Lawrence Constitution at a late hour on Wednesday night:

"The Kansas bill received the President's signature. Mr. Coway appeared at the door of the House and announced the fact to the members who were in session.

Kansas is Free.

Two days ago Lawrence received the news of the admission of the administration of the Union. We were received the glorious news that Kansas had at last entered the Union. Now we are free, and with Fitch's amendment in regard to the judiciary, yesterday. The following dispatch was sent to the Lawrence Constitution:

"Washington, Jan. 29, 1861.

A. C. WILDER.—The State bill, with Fitch's amendment, was signed by the

MARCUS J. PARROT."

KANSAS BILL SIGNED!

The following special dispatch was received by the Lawrence Constitution at a late hour on Wednesday night:

"The Kansas bill received the President's signature. Mr. Coway appeared at the door of the House and announced the fact to the members who were in session.

We hear the jubilant news locally in the streets, and the sounds of the "Yankee Hallelujahs" are glorifying the event. All hail! we citizens of the United States once more conquerors of the South!—We have a great deal to do, and the eventual success of the cause is not yet secured. We have a little while, and Charles Robinson assumes his official robes, and we may then begin our work.

The great young Headless is gone, and his place is now occupied by the old man of the South. He is now a pensioner, and he is a pal for a day.

Although Kansas is the youngest, she is by no means the weakest, she has a strong army, and she is well equipped with every resource.

Let me see if we can't make out a picture of the South.

assumes his official robes, and

we may then begin our work.

When they came over a surrend ed, when they came over a surrend
