

Leigh R. Webber to John Stillman Brown

A letter written by Leigh R. Webber from Kansas City, Missouri, addressed to John Stillman Brown, a Unitarian minister who lived west of Lawrence, Kansas. Webber begins by recounting other letters he had recently sent to members of the Brown family. He describes the march from Lexington to Kansas City and future plans to continue on to Fort Scott. Webber also discusses his father's recent death.

The afternoon we got here, our company jayhooked (or got in some way) a large quantity of tinware, but most of it is of such a kind as to be of no use to us.

I have but little opportunity no convenience for writing and cannot present give any of the particulars you inquired about; either for publication or otherwise. My health is very good.
So is that of all the men generally.
