CLASS I—HORTICULTURAL AND FLORAL DEPARTMENT.

REPORT OF SUPERINTENDENT.

To the Kansas State Board of Agriculture:

I have the honor to transmit the following report of the tree and fruit exhibition of the Horticultural Department of the State Fair, held at Topeka, September 16th-20th, 1872. I also transmit herewith, the reports of committees:

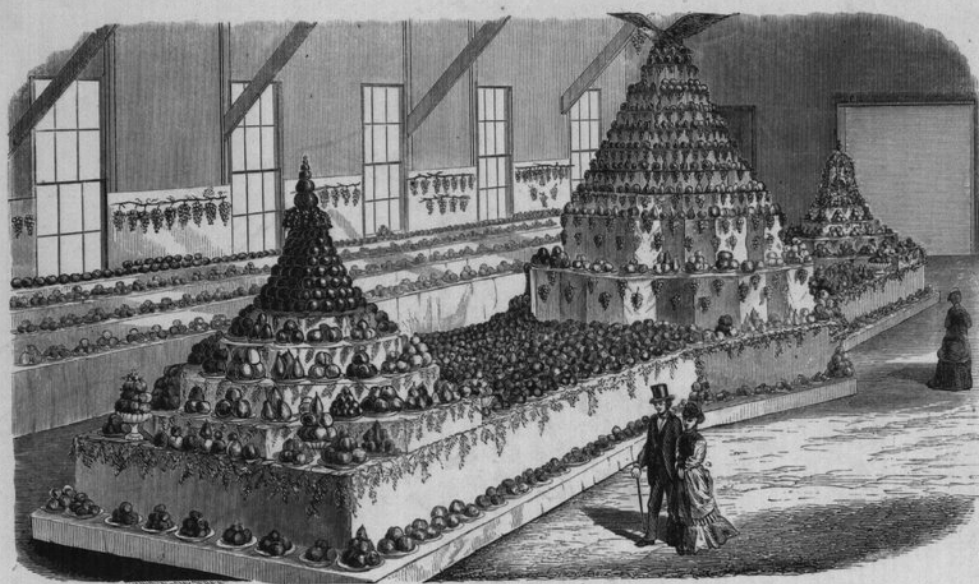

Major J. K. Hudson had charge of the other lots in this department, but aided me very much in arranging my part of the work.

Of trees and plants, there were thirteen entries, and the display was very creditable to the exhibitors. The trees all showed a clean, thrifty, healthy growth. Two-year apples, being six to seven feet in height, with a strong stem, and well formed head; Peach, Pear, Plum, Cherry and Quince, all showed a like thrifty, healthy growth.

The fine collections of Evergreen and deciduous ornamental trees and shrubs, showed that our soil and climate can grow nearly all of the varieties as well as they can be grown East.

For the greatest and best display of fruits by any State, county, township, society or individual, there were four entries. Two of these were withdrawn, leaving the contest to the State Horticultural Societies of Missouri and Kansas.

The Missouri Society was allotted the west wing of the Floral Hall, and the Kansas Society the east wing.

The large amount of space in these two wings was packed with the choicest of Apples, Pears, Grapes, and other fruits. The extensive tables were arranged in gorgeous pyramids of fruit, which also decorated the walls, and overhung the passageways. The different sizes and shades of color were so arranged as to show to the best advantage, making, altogether, the largest and grandest display of fruits ever held in the West, and perhaps in America. Much credit is due the Societies, as well as the soil and climate of the two competing States, for this grand display.

I transmit herewith the report of the Awarding Committee for information respecting the merits of the fruit, and the award of premiums.

For individual collections of fruit there were two hundred and forty-one entries; the fruit occupying the entire centre and east side of the north wing of Floral Hall. The display was very fine, and the specimens large, fair and remarkably free from disease and marks of insect enemies. It is hoped that while we are measurably free from the depredations of noxious insects which are so destructive to the fruits farther east, the fruit growers of Kansas will carefully guard against the introduction of these insect enemies, and thus save themselves from great trouble and loss hereafter.

Much of the fruit on exhibition competing for premiums was incorrectly named or without any name. Some persons seem not to care to know the names of their fruit, as they say it makes it no better.

It seems to me that the object in offering premiums is, or should be, to bring out the best, that we may learn what is best, in order to propagate and grow it hereafter. And taking that view of it, I regard a premium awarded to an unknown variety as so much thrown away.

I would suggest that to remedy this, there should be no premiums awarded to varieties not correctly named, or that a committee should be appointed to examine all fruits on exhibition and correct the nomenclature.

Respectfully submitted,

S. T. KELSEY, Sup't Class I.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

To the Board of Agriculture of the State of Kansas:

GENTLEMEN: Your committee appointed and instructed to determine, merit and award the premiums offered by your Board for the "greatest and best display of fruit by any State, county, township, society or individual," beg leave to submit the following report:

We found a display of fruit beyond all precedent in the history of exhibitions in the West. Indeed we do not believe that in number of varieties, quality of fruit, and elaboration and taste in arrangement, it has ever been excelled by any collection in the United States.

In the Kansas collection, there were eight hundred and thirty-three plates of apples, eighty-five of pears, eighty of grapes, seventeen of peaches, eleven of plums and nine of quinces. To this must be added a very large quantity of fruit on shelves, in clusters, and in various ornamental devices.

In answer to our request, the Society having this lot of fruit in charge, reported a written statement of the kinds of fruit and the names, so far as they had them, of the varieties of each kind. By reference to this statement, which forms a part of this report, you will see that one hundred and eighty-six varieties of apples, twenty-six of pears, fifteen of peaches, eight of plums, twenty-eight of grapes, and two of quinces, are claimed as correctly named; also thirty-nine varieties of apples without names.

The officers of the Missouri Horticultural Society did not respond to our request with a report of the number of plates of the several kinds of fruit exhibited by them, but gave us a report of kinds and varieties, which is herewith handed you for information, wherein they claim, as correctly named, two hundred and sixteen varieties of apples, thirty-five of pears, seven of peaches, seven of grapes, six of plums, three of quince and six of crabs. To this they add unnamed varieties; sixty to eighty of apples, thirty-nine of peaches and forty of pears.

Your committee made a careful examination of the competing displays, both in the aggregate and in detail; corresponding varieties in the two collections were compared to a sufficient extent to establish a correct judgment as to the comparative merits of the collections. This comparison was with reference to size, perfection in form, freedom from natural defects and insect injuries. Bruises and damage by handling were not allowed to enter as an element of consideration, as the actual merit of the fruit when plucked from the tree, was believed to be the true test.

Our examination being completed, the Missouri Horticultural Society were granted, on their own request, a hearing before the award was determined.

Mr. R. J. Lewis, on behalf of the Society, raised the following points, and asked for them careful consideration by your committee in determining the award, viz:

First. "In making the entry for this premium the Missouri Horticultural Society duly considered the published conditions or statement of such entries as printed in your premium list, and proposed to follow and abide by them without outside influence."

Second. "The Society demanded that a legitimate construction be put upon the language of the said conditions of your offer by parties conversant with the English language."

Third. "Consideration should be given by the Awarding Committee to the defects in the Missouri fruit, resulting from the greater distance of transportation and greater amount of handling."

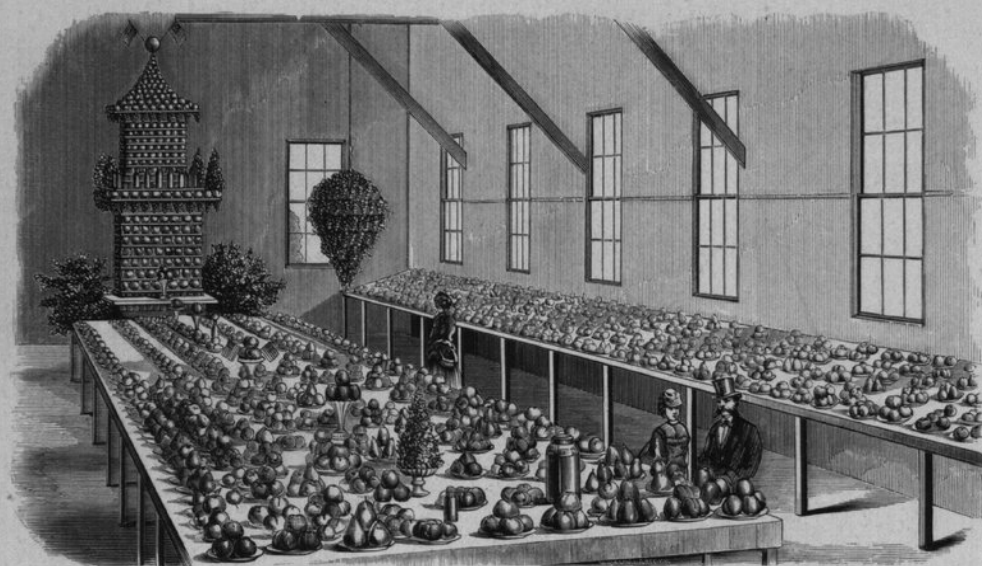

These points received thoughtful consideration, and our judgment thereon is recorded for your information, inasmuch as they involve the premises upon which our conclusions are based.

In answer to the first point, we do most solemnly aver that we never had a desire, or inclination even, to disregard the conditions upon which the premium was offered, and in justice to others, declare that there has been no effort on the part of your honorable Board, or of any one else, to color or govern our action by outside influence of any name or nature.

To the second point we say that nothing but a legitimate construction of the language of your published conditions has been desired by us, and that if we have failed to give your words a correct construction, it has been from defective education, which left us liable to the imputation of not being "conversant with the English language."

We construe the words "greatest and best display," as used by you, to refer solely to the fruit itself, and in no manner to the arrangement of such fruit for exhibition. We understand that you offer the prize for the best collection of fruit, variety and quality being considered, and not for the artistic arrangement of the fruit. The display itself, and not the manner of the display, we suppose it to be our duty to pass upon. The artistic merit of arrangement in these displays has received no consideration whatever at our hands, believing as we did, that you designed to have the premium awarded to superior excellence in the fruit, as shown by comparison of individual specimens and aggregated collections.

In other words, our decision is substantially upon the comparative merits of soil and climate, between the States of Kansas and Missouri, as fruit producing territories, as measured by the display of fruit exhibited for our examination by the societies, representing these states respectively.

If we have failed to comprehend the import of your language or the purpose of your Honorable Board, we trust you will set aside our award. No consideration of courtesy should sustain an erroneous decision of a question involving, as this one does, interests of such magnitude.

Before recording our decision, we beg your attention to the lists of fruits furnished us by the contestants. In the named varieties of the Missouri display, out of two hundred and sixteen varieties of apples, only eighty-six are found in the standard work of Dr. John A. Warder, five are synonyms of the same apples; forty-five do not appear in the Kansas list, and eighty appear in both lists.

In the Kansas list of one hundred and eighty-six named varieties, we find forty-four names not in Warder's Pomology, fifty-four not in the Missouri list, eight synonyms and eighty named in both lists.

We regret that time did not admit of a more thorough analysis of these lists, by comparing them with the late work of Downing and other authors. What we have done is simply suggestive, and we venture to urge upon you an exhaustive examination of this matter with reference to a corrected nomenclature of our fruit. Uniform names in a standard work is a necessity, and we believe no other field of labor open to you can be cultivated with better results to your State and the country, than this. It should not be possible for such intelligent fruit culturists as cultivate the prolific soil of Missouri to bring up seventy-five varieties of pears to your fair, with forty of them unnamed.

Your committee have only to add, that after examination of the competing fruit, and passing upon the points raised by the Missouri Society, it was determined to test the judgment of each member of the committee before any decision or interchange of views were had. This was done by a closed ballot, on opening of which it was found that we were unanimous in the opinion that the Kansas State Horticultural Society was entitled to the premium of $100 offered by you, "For the
