

Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company depot, Osage City, Kansas

This photograph shows three men seated on the tracks in front of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company depot in Osage City, Kansas. In the background individuals are visible standing around the depot. The combination depot built between 1911 and 1912 is designed in the Mission Spanish Revival style and features a brick and stucco exterior. The one-story structure was placed on the National Register of Historic Places on May 11, 1989. The depot no longer provides rail service but houses the Osage County Railroad and Mining Museum.
